

The John Marshall Law School Center for Intellectual Property Law

The John Marshall Law School is a pioneer in intellectual property education and one of its leading providers today.

In 1940, farsighted educators at the law school saw the advances in science and the arts that would produce tremendous growth in intellectual endeavors and associated increases in intellectual property concerns. They responded by offering a specialized one-year patent law course in cooperation with what is now the Intellectual Property Law Association of Chicago. This was one of the first specialized IP programs in America.

During the more than 65 years since, John Marshall has expanded its IP course offerings as the field of IP has expanded. The result is one of the most extensive sets of IP offerings in this country. In 2007 alone, there were more than 30 specialized IP courses taught at John Marshall by top IP professors and practitioners in the IP-rich legal environment of Chicago.

The John Marshall Law School is dedicated to training law students and attorneys in the ever-changing features of intellectual property law, one of the fastest growing and most exciting fields of law today. Intellectual property law crosses all aspects of science, technology, business, the arts, and international trade. As these fields change, new intellectual property issues continue to develop. Rapidly changing modes of creative activity produce new types of discoveries and creative works. Creators of these new discoveries and works need advice from intellectual property attorneys about how to protect their works and how to avoid limitations on their creative efforts from the intellectual property rights of others.

Under the leadership of a full-time director and part-time associate director, the Center for Intellectual Property Law offers JD, MS, and LLM candidates, as well as practicing attorneys and paralegals, specialized training in the developing issues and features of intellectual property law and its important impacts on society and our future endeavors.

Dear Colleague:

The John Marshall Law School Center for Intellectual Property Law is pleased to announce a certificate course for Intellectual Property Administrators — including paralegals and legal assistants — to be conducted during the summer term at The John Marshall Law School.

We are fortunate to have two outstanding instructors — members of the adjunct faculty at John Marshall — investing their time and talent in putting the course together. We know you will benefit from their efforts.

Brent Hawkins is a partner in the Chicago office of McDermott Will & Emery.

Stacy Chronopoulos is the Chief Trademark Counsel at the Wm. Wrigley Jr. Company.

We urge you to take advantage of this outstanding course and to encourage your associates and colleagues to take advantage of it as well.

2009 Summer Term

Tuesdays, 6 – 8 p.m., May 5 to July 7, 2009

The John Marshall Law School, 315 S. Plymouth Court, Chicago, Illinois

The School

The John Marshall Law School Center for Intellectual Property Law offers one of the oldest and most comprehensive programs in intellectual property law in the country. It is dedicated solely to training lawyers, law students, and legal assistants in domestic and international intellectual property law. It is internationally recognized for providing the finest in legal education in patent, trademark, copyright, trade secrets, and related areas of practice.

The Course

This course is designed to take the paralegal/legal assistant through myriad details, forms, and processes unique to the practice of intellectual property law and train the participant to become an integral part of the law firm or corporate law department intellectual property law team. It is specifically designed to help cultivate a comprehensive, systematic knowledge of intellectual property law, providing the knowledge needed by administrators, paralegals, and legal assistants for a productive, fulfilling, and advancing career. A final examination will be administered and a Certificate of Completion will be presented to students completing the course. The course includes the impact of the Madrid Protocol on U.S. trademark prosecution practice.

The Faculty

Brent Hawkins is a partner in the Chicago office of McDermott Will & Emery. He is a member of the firm's Intellectual Property, Media & Technology Department and focuses his practice on all aspects of domestic and foreign patents, trademarks, copyrights, trade secrets, and unfair competition, including prosecution, litigation counseling, investigation, and transactional practice. He received his BS in Engineering from the University of Michigan and his JD from the University of Illinois.

Stacy Chronopoulos is the Chief Trademark Counsel at Wm. Wrigley Jr. Company, where she practices domestic and international trademark and copyright prosecution, litigation, and licensing. She received a BA degree in English Literature from Miami University and a JD degree from DePaul University College of Law.
