Sonia Katyal

Professor Katyal teaches in the areas of intellectual property, property, and civil rights. Before coming to Fordham, Professor Katyal was an associate specializing in intellectual property litigation in the San Francisco office of Covington & Burling.

She received her AB from Brown University in 1993, and her JD from the University of Chicago Law School in 1998.

After law school, Professor Katyal clerked for the Honorable Carlos Moreno (now a California Supreme Court Justice) in the Central District of California from 1998–99 and the Honorable Dorothy Nelson in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit from 1999–2000.

Professor Katyal's scholarly work focuses on intellectual property, civil rights, and new media. Her current projects study the relationship between copyright enforcement and privacy (as applied to peer-to-peer technology); and the impact of artistic expression and parody on corporate identity, advertising, and brand equity. She also works on issues relating to intellectual property and indigenous people's rights, with a special focus on cultural property in the United States and abroad.

Professor Katyal has won three awards for scholarly work: her paper, "Exporting Identity," received a Dukeminier Award in 2002; in 2004, another paper, "The New Surveillance," won the Yale Cybercrime Award.

Her most recent paper, "Semiotic Disobedience," was awarded an Honorable Mention in the 2006 Scholarly Papers Competition by the American Association of Law Schools, and was recently profiled in the New York Times Magazine.
