WATER AS A RESOURCE: IMPACT ON REAL ESTATE OWNERSHIP, DEVELOPMENT, AND LAND USE POLICY

The 11th Kratovil Conference on Real Estate Law & Practice will explore the relationship between water and real estate. Concerns about sufficiency of water supplies are no longer limited to the western United States. An academic conference exploring these emerging water issues is especially timely as Chicago celebrates the Centennial of the Burnham Plan. The Burnham Plan Centennial celebration provides a unique opportunity for the region's communities, leaders and institutions to reflect on the role of innovation and planning in the past and continue to innovate in the future. The John Marshall Law School is a Program Partner for the Burnham Plan Centennial. By presenting this Kratovil Conference looking at Water as Natural Resource and other academic programs for the Burnham Plan Centennial, the Center for Real Estate Law is providing a venue where ideas can be presented and discussed about emerging issues of water and sustainability that will affect the United States in the coming years.
