ASIAN ALLIANCE PROGRAM

Chicago, Illinois

US–China Intellectual Property Protection Cooperation and Research Forum

The OLD initiative being celebrated is the extraordinary 15-year history of John Marshall's educational service to the Chinese State Intellectual Property Office (SIPO) and its predecessor. Through this service, John Marshall has contributed to the growth and improvement of the Chinese intellectual property system. In tandem with the commitment of the Chinese government to economic growth and commercial laws and institutions to support this growth, John Marshall has been building educational bridges to the Chinese IP community and training Chinese IP specialists who are now leaders in their field. John Marshall is proud to count many Chinese judges, SIPO leaders, and senior IP attorneys among its alumni. Through the many efforts of John Marshall's Asian Alliance, more than 400 Chinese IP specialists have taken courses at The John Marshall Law School in Chicago.

The NEW initiative is the creation of a significant and exciting Chinese IP Resource Center at The John Marshall Law School. The new Chinese IP Resource Center will serve US students and IP specialists as a window into the Chinese IP system. It will also serve Chinese IP specialists as a forum for the international study and discussion of developing features of the Chinese IP system. The new Chinese IP Resource Center will provide a much-needed link between US and Chinese officials, judges, lawyers, academics, and students regarding shared issues of IP development and usage in China, as well as transfers of technology and other IP to and from China. No other law school in the United States has established such a Resource Center. John Marshall is uniquely positioned to succeed in creating and growing this Resource Center because of the support of leaders of the Chinese IP community that John Marshall has established through many years of work with that community.
