

THE JOHN MARSHALL LAW SCHOOL

Student Organization Policy

More than 50 student organizations exist at The John Marshall Law School. First-year students are encouraged to attend meetings and become familiar with student organizations of their interest. Since the first year of law school is extremely demanding, first-year students are advised to minimize active organizational participation until after completion of the second semester of law school.

Student organizations are prohibited from hosting political candidates on campus.